Charlene R. Day, Assistant United States Attorney, Roanoke, Virginia, for United States; Frederick T. Heblich, Jr., for Defendant.

The government has objected to any reduction in sentence for this defendant, who is eligible for such a reduction under 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(2) by virtue of the lowering of the crack cocaine guidelines.

I will overrule the government's objections.

The government asks the court to reconsider information contained in the Presentence Investigation Report (in particular the conduct underlying the offense and the defendant's criminal history), to consider the fact that the defendant has been treated with "substantial leniency" because he has benefitted from a plea agreement, and to consider the defendant's behavior while incarcerated.

I find none of the government's arguments persuasive. As I have explained on several prior occasions, see, e.g., United States v. Herndon, No. 3:01CR00063, 2008

WL 750588 at *1 (W.D. Va. Mar. 19, 2008), the defendant's criminal background and the conduct underlying his offense are taken into consideration when calculating his Criminal History Category and Total Offense Level. The government has failed even to allege that the defendant's criminal history or danger to the public are not accurately conveyed by his Criminal History Category and Total Offense Level. Accordingly, I find that neither the conduct underlying the offense nor the defendant's criminal history is a bar to reducing his sentence.

The government next argues that the defendant has already received a lower sentence than he should have received because he has benefitted from a plea agreement, and therefore his sentence should not be reduced. This argument is without merit because the defendant pled not guilty and was convicted by a jury.

Finally, the government contends the defendant's behavior while incarcerated militates against a reduction in his sentence. The Chronological Disciplinary Report submitted by the government indicates that in the approximately fifteen years that the defendant has been incarcerated, he has been sanctioned for thirteen incidents of misconduct. Notably, the defendant has not been sanctioned for any offense since December 16, 1998. It appears that the defendant initially had challenges adjusting to life in prison, but for almost ten years, he has been a model inmate. For these reasons, I do not find his behavior while in prison sufficiently reprehensible to bar a reduction of his sentence.

A separate judgement will be entered.
